An Unpleasant Trip.

Doctor Ellis isn't at all pleased with his trip to Omaha and thinks that city is too unruly. As a sample of the way they "do up people" over the river the doctor refers to his Saturday trip. As he was on his way to the depot in a Farnam street car on his return to Council Bluffs two men somewhat under the influence of liquor occupied the rear platform and as a young man jumped onto the car he accidentally stepped onto one of their feet. He apologized but that did not satisfy the insulted individual so he nit him a crack that sent him against the car window and into the street. He then went towards the front platform and was followed by the drunken man's friend. The car was full of ladies, and only three men were in it. The ladies became irightened and scrambled out of the car as did two of the men. The man who was knocked off the car again jumped on and just as Doctor Ellis had got the broken glass from the window shook off, he received a blow in the head from the fellow's fist. The fellow then made for the front platform after his assailant and away they skipped over the dashboard leaving Dr. Ellis the only occupant of the car.

THE IMPOSING CEREMONIES.

The Laying of the Corner Stone of St. Francis Xavier's Church.

FATHER NUGENT'S SERMON.

The Boatmen Preparing For Sport-Bunday Sundries Gathered For the Bee Readers.

Laying the Corner Stone. The event of yesterday was the laying of the corner stone of the new Catholic church. The ceremonies took place yesterday afternoon. The procession formed at the old Catholic church on Pearl street with its head resting on Fifth avenue. It countermarched up Pearl stree to Willow avenue, along that avenue to Sixth street, down Sixth street to the corner of Fifth avenue, where the new church is to be built, marched clear around the block and then was dismissed in front of the church. The procession was composed of the Ancient Order of Hibernians band, of Omaha, which played very nicely; two divisions of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Omaha; the various societies of this city, the A. O. H., the St. Patrick's Benevolent, Catholic Kningts, the pupils of the academies, the members of the congregation and

There was a large crowd to witness the laying of the corner stone. The ceremonies were in accordance with the rit-ual of the church, and were quite im-pressive, although very few were able to hear or understand the details. Bishop Cosgrove, of Davenport, was the cele-brant, and laid the corner stone. Rev. Father Dowling, of Creighton college, and Rev. Father Dunn, Father Adolphus, O. S. B. of Atchison, Kan., and Rev. Father Lyons, O. S. B., prior of St. Malachi's at Creston, were also among the clergy.

The corner stone bore the inscription,

"St. Francis Xavier's Church, Corner-Stone Laid April 24, 1887. Rev. B. P. McMenomy, Pastor."

The ceremonies included not only the blessing of the stone, and its consecration by sprinkling with holy water, but an imposing march was made around the entire foundations which were likewise consecrated by the sprinkling of the outside of the church, as it was a strong setting forth of the peculiar text of the Catholic faith. The burden of the argument was to show that the Catholic church, was the church, the true church, the only church. He based his reasoning on the fact that any one who believed in the divinity of Christ must deem it reasonable that Christ would establish a divine church. A divine person like Christ would not establish a human church, any more than a human person could establish a divine church. The reverend father then proceeded to show the organization of this church. The twelve were commissioned by Christ to go out into the world and preach the gospel to every people. They were made a corporation. The charter was given them. The life of this time. The church was to last as long as the earth lasted. But having organized and got their divine charter it became necessary that something else should be added. This was the spirit which de-scended in pentecost. Christ in organizing His church on earth meant that this church should be the mouthpiece of God. It must necessarily be human, but the promise was given that the spirit shall remain in the church to keep it from

The dedicary sermon was delivered by Rev. Father Nugent, of Des Moines. He stood on the front of the church foundation and spoke in so clear and ringing a voice that the great crowd, reaching out in every direction, filling the streets and sidewalks, could hear every word. It was a wonderful discourse. Those who witnessed the preceding ceremonies, and who intended listening to but a fragment of the sermon, found themselves standing as attentive listners to the very finish. Father Nugent is one of the finest orators in the church. Yesterday was one of his best efforts. Although following a logical line of thought, closely knitting argument to argument, the discourse was full of fervor and feeling. His sermon was peculiarly interesting to those outside of the servor and servor.

This led to the development of the claim that the true church could be ever distinguishable by certain signs which no human organization calling itself a church could ever successfully counterfeit. One of these was the unity of the church and the unity of doctrine. The Catholic church held to the same doctrines which were preached in the days of Christ. These doctrines were given to the church by Christ, and could not be changed. The spirit had remained in the church guarding it. Other organizations were human. They looked on theology as a progressive, and even doubtful science. Not so with this church, Its doctrines did not change. They could not change any more than Christ could change. The opponents of the church criticised it as not being progressive. It gloried in the fact that it clung to the same doctrines which Christ taught.

This was the foundation of the doctrine of the infallibility of the church. If this was a mere human organization, a mere divinity club, this could not be, but the church was divine in its origin, and was the means by which

God was moulding the world.

The doctrine of the apostolic succession was also dwelt upon. The illustra-tion of the corporation maintaining its life through individual members passed away was again used. The commission was handed down the centuries, and no man could put his finger on one break in the chain, so that those who were to-day commissioned to go forth and teach all nations received their message by a di-rect line from Christ himself.

Another distinguishing feature of this true church was the holiness of the church. It being divine, indestructible and indivisable. It must be holy. It was here that the struggle arose with the world. The doctrines of infallibility and of apostolical succession were for theologians, but the holiness of the church touched practical life- It was the edge of the chisel which came in contact with the rough block of marble, chipping it into beauty. The holiness of the church was always in conflict with the evil of the was always in conflict with the evil of the world. Hence the church was always in trouble, always would be. There could be counterfeits made of the externals of the church, but the church itself could never be counterfeited. An artist might model a man from marble, but could not give it life. A church organization of human origin was like the cold statute, God had breathed his spirit into the church and it could not be counterfeited. The speaker made an earnest appeal

The speaker made an earnest appeal for Catholics to stand by the faith which has thus come down to them through the has thus come down to them through the centuries from Christ himself. The church being the voice of God, it should be obeyed promptly and willingly. As the building, the corner stone of which was thus laid, was to be the house of God, it should be erected with generous, willing hands. God should be honored, and an expression given of the faith of the people. Everyone should have a portion in the building. Blessings would followed.

Chestnut Tunes.

"We will now have No. 5 on the programe," said a gentleman in the opera house on Saturday night, shortly after the curtain dropped at the end of one of the acts. "I haven't missed a single show," he continued, "that has played in this house in the past year, and I know every tune that the orchestra can play One thing nice about it is that you can follow the musicians through their parts and be as well able to judge if they drop notes, etc., as if you were a musician yourself. It simply takes a little attention on your part and you have the airs by heart. See if you recognize the next piece they play. Shortly after the conversation ended the orchestra struck up and the word "chestnuts" was very audible to the Bee

Doing Well. The two switchmen who were on different occasions both caught between the two same freight cars in the same manner and so badly crushed, are both doing tinely. Chris Anderson, who had such a miraculous escape from being crushed to death, after remaining in St. Joseph's hospital, in Omaha, has been brought to his home in this city near the Union Pacitic "dump" and is doing finely. It will be a long while be-fore he is able to be out though. His case was such that no one anticipated his recovery. While the other switchman, Hildebrand, did not receive such a severe test of his powers of endurance, he was badly squeezed. He is now able to be up and about the Pianter's hotel and expects to be out shortly.

UNDERTAKERS' TALES.

Stories Told By Funeral Directors At Their Regular Meeting. Pittsburgh Dispatch: "I had a funny experience years ago, when I worked for Mayor-elect McCallin in this city," remarked a county undertaker. "What was that?"

"Why, I got paid for burying a man twice. It was this way: A man had been fished up out of the river and sent to our house to bury. That night about 9 o'clock in came two women, a mother and daughter, named Smith, living on the South side. They asked to see the drowned man, and as quick as I lifted the cloth that covered his face, the old lady threw up both hands and screamed, That's him; that's my poor husband. The young lady identified him, too, but didn't seem to feel very bad. The next morning the family lawyer came to me and gave orders for the burial. The old man, it seemed, had considerable money; at any rate, I worked him off real re-About a year later the same lawyer came to me and says: "You ought to owe me

"Well, I went over and laid the man out. While I was at work on him the old lady came in and said: "Well, he's ead enough this time, poor man. The ight after we'd buried him before he ame walking into the room where we was all sitting. He had taken a little too much drink, and had just got over it and read about our buryin' him in the papers, and Lor' but he was mad. I knew it was no sperret as soon as he came in. But I guess he won't come back this time.

"I never like to shave a corpse," remarked a red headed funeral director from an adjoining county, "and if it is practicable always like to get a barber About a month ago I had an old map to bury who had died with four or five days' growth of beard. His limbs had contracted terribly after death, and to straighten them out we had laid a couple of pieces of plank across him. He was lying on his bed in this way when the barber came—a big colored fellow—with considerable superstition about him. He shaved the outside of the face all right, and then bad to climb on the bed, over the deceased, to shave the other side. In some way his knees hit the plank which lay across the dead man's chest and held his arms down, releasing both and held his arms down, releasing both arms. They sprung together like the jaws of a steel-trap, and happened to catch the barber on both sides of the head. He gave one long yell that lasted till he reached the street, and that was the last seen of him. I had to finish the job myself. The darky was so badly scared that it was three days before he work again.

City Funeral Director-Certainly. 1 have three expressions—one for first-class funerals, one for medium, and one for cheap funerals. First class funerals, as I call them, are when the family has wealth and social position. These people are calm and undemonstrative in heir sorrow, and I use what I call my "dignified sorrow" expression—a calm, sad look, with a white tie. I charge $10 extra for this in my et cateras. For the medium class I just sing in a sort of "ministerial sadness" look that costs them $5 extra. If the family have lots of money and are pretty shoddy, and bound to make a big show, 1 use a "suppressed grief" expression that I pride myself on. It is really pathetic. That costs the mourners $25, but it's a dandy.

"ME AND CLEVELAND."

The Great Scheme a Blear-Eyed Bum Hit on in Washington. "Towle" in Boston Traveller: A short time ago a blear-eyed bum who had often boasted that "me and Cleveland are chums; I've slept with him often when we lived in Buffalo," hit upon a racket which has not only raised him in the estimation of others, but has kept the dust out of his throat ever since. He attended the white house receptions and he saw that there was a chance to strike an alcoholic bonanza, so to speak. He went back to his old position in one of the hotel lobbies and cultivated the acquaintance of the strangers. Casually he told them the old story of "me and Cleveland," adding by the way, "I would take great pleasure in giving you a personal "Towle" in Boston Traveller: A short great pleasure in giving you a personal introduction to the president." The strangers' eyes stuck out. Of course they would esteem it an honor, etc. Then the "worker" replied that he would make arrangements. The next reception day he headed quite a respectable procession and asked them into the east room at the white house. While there he regaled them with stories about the president's daily life until Mr. Cleveland appeared. Being careful to head the line, he approached the president with great effusiveness, shook hands, and then introduced the strangers by name. The introductions certainly looked as though the "worker" enjoyed the president's personal acquaintance, while as a matter of fact Mr. Cleveland never saw the man before. Of course this little episode raised the "worker" high in the estima-tion of the newly-found friends, and for several days afterwards he fairly reveled in their hospitable attentions. It is hardly necessary to add that none of the officials at the executive mansion are familiar with these facts. As soon as they learn them some steps will be taken to pro
